

The Verdict in the Gottlieb Williams Case. To the Editor of The Evening Telegraph.—I, in common with a great many other persons, feel very much troubled about the verdict rendered in the case of Gottlieb Williams; and without desiring to make any ill-natured reflections upon the jury who found him guilty (who were, I am informed, all highly respectable and intelligent men), I must say that a majority of persons, members of the bar, physicians, and others, with whom I have conversed, feel that the evidence against him was not sufficiently conclusive to warrant a conviction. Living in the house and having charge of a paralyzed person, knowing how unable she was to address herself, and do the smallest act which requires strength, and that a push from an infant will cause her to fall (although not half so badly afflicted as Williams), I am thoroughly convinced that it would have been quite impossible for him to have done this murder.

Amongst the evidence brought forward as indicating a guilty and remorseful conscience, is that on the day of the murder he took a narcotic, with the view of ending his life. Witnesses proved that they heard him say that "he was weary of life, and intended committing suicide." All who know anything of paralyzed persons know, also, that even those most comfortably situated, whose whose means are large, who have long friends, careful attendance, the best medical advice, are continually longing for death, and are often tempted to end the life of enforced inactivity and weariness by suicide. Gottlieb Williams was a poor, homeless wanderer, subsisting on the charity of a brother not well able to bear the burden of his support, quite unable from his disease to provide a living for himself, looking forward only to a life of penury and misery.

When, therefore, that upon the approach of a day so fraught with painful associations as a birthday to those of middle life (however comfortably surrounded) must always be, he should have resolved never to see another anniversary so full of sorrowful remembrances?

I have seen Williams and talked with him in his cell, and have heard from him that for two years he has been totally paralyzed on one side, and partially so on the other, and that for the first year after the strokes (he has had two) was entirely helpless and confined to his bed. His left side is devoid of feeling and motion, slumped and limp as a rag, and his right also bears the same appearance, in a less degree. He seems scarcely to realize what his condition involves, and has the manner of one wholly overcome with astonishment at the conclusion to which the jury arrived. He thinks that the evidence certainly was insufficient for his conviction, and that his previous bad name did the business for him.

He is shrewd and intelligent, calmly reviews the whole testimony, points out discrepancies which he thinks the jury could not have considered at all, speaks of the entire absence of any motive he could have had for such a deed, says Mrs. Miller was always particularly kind to him, wonders how any one could commit a murder for the sake of plunder would stoop to take of the large and swollen joints of the finger a ring comparatively worthless, and leave a purse containing several dollars lying untouched (as the evidence shows) close at hand. This, too, when the doors might have been closed and locked, and the house ransacked at leisure. He does not seem angry with the jury, but thinks they tested to what they believed to be the truth, although they were mistaken in the day, they having seen him on Tuesday, instead of Wednesday morning, enter the alley leading to the house. However this may be, I, for one, believe him innocent, and feel that it will be terrible beyond expression to execute him for the murder. D. D. R.

AMUSEMENTS. CONCERT OF THE MENDELSSOHN SOCIETY.—A large and brilliant audience assembled in the Music Fund Hall, on Saturday evening last, on the occasion of a concert of the Mendelssohn Society. The Society numbered upwards of two hundred and fifty voices, and the effect of the various choruses given during the evening was sublime in the extreme.

The splendid duo at the beginning of it, "In His Hands are all the Corners of the Earth," was sung with the deepest feeling and feeling by Miss Cunningham and Miss Forbes, Miss Cunningham's rich soprano fairly reveling in the beautiful music of her part of it. Mr. Bishop's solo, "Come, let us worship," was sung in good taste and with proper emphasis, and the grand choruses—"Come let us sing," "The Sea is His Kingdom," and "The Lord God"—were magnificently rendered. In fact, the whole work was disposed of in a manner that showed the careful rehearsal that had been given to it, and the talent of those engaged in its performance.

The duet "Sweet Tears," in the second part of the Concert, by Mrs. Holman and Miss Gormley, was a delicious rendering of one of the most beautiful efforts of Paganini. It was rapturously received. Miss Blackburne's clear, ringing soprano and excellent method were very advantageously displayed in Rossini's "La Charlie," which was admirably executed. The piano playing of Mr. Henry G. Thumder, in the Fantasia of Beethoven, was artistic in the highest degree, and the difficulties of the part were surmounted with all the ease and grace of the finished executant. Mr. Thumder has evidently studied Beethoven deeply, as his interpretation of the Fantasia was the most finished and satisfactory we have ever heard in this country. The warmth, brilliancy, and dash of his execution were prominent features in the production of the work, and his effort generally was such as to win the unqualified approbation of all who heard it.

The chorus of the Fantasia was also effectively rendered, and the solos were likewise commendably done. Mr. Jean Louis, the Director of the Society, led on the occasion, and acquitted himself gracefully and in every way satisfactorily.

The concert, altogether, was one of the best of the season, and has added, we think, another laurel to the wreath of successes already won by the Mendelssohns.

ITALIAN OPERA.—The Parepa-Bignoli Opera Troupe can give only six performances in this city, commencing at the Academy of Music next Monday evening, April 8, at 7 o'clock, with: on Tuesday, Norma; on Wednesday, The Barber of Seville. The subscription books will be opened to-morrow morning at the music store of C. W. A. Trumpner, Seventh and Chestnut streets.

NEW CHESTNUT STREET THEATRE.—Mr. J. E. Murdoch, the distinguished American actor, commences a brief engagement at this theatre, his elegant and masterly impersonation of "Young Mirabel," in the sparkling comedy of "Wine Wonders; or, The Inconstant," Miss Jessie Orton will assume the role of "Orlana," the drama of "The Gunsmaker of Moscow" will also be presented.

On Tuesday evening, Mr. Murdoch as "Hamlet."

NEW ARCH STREET THEATRE.—This evening the successful comedy of Ours will be presented, with Mrs. John Drew as "Mary Nelley." Tuesday, benefit of Mrs. Thayer, Wednesday, twenty-eighth representation of Ours. Thursday, benefit of Miss Annie Ward, Friday, benefit of Mrs. John Drew, Saturday, benefit of Mr. Sam Hinkle, on Monday next benefit of Mr. Adams appears in Clairvoyance; or, The Man with the Wax Figures.

WALNUT STREET THEATRE.—Lead, the Forsaken, will be presented, supported by Mr. Western as "Nathan, the Apostle." On Saturday afternoon a grand East Lynne matinee will be given.

AMERICAN THEATRE.—Miss Emma Fowler, Miss Jennie Benson, Miss La Ross, Miss Carrie Ansd, Mad'ie Louise, and the entire variety troupe of fifty performers, appear every evening in an attractive entertainment. THE PEAK FAMILY, Swiss Bell-Ringers, have had such crowded houses at Concert Hall that they will appear for two weeks longer. They give exhibitions every evening this week, and on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons. This company is the union of the two Peak families and the Berger family, and embraces twenty-four performers, making the largest troupe of Bell-Ringers in the world, and manipulate 280 silver bells.

CARNGROSS & DIXIE, at the Eleventh Street Opera House, announce that this is the last week of the Black Japanese Troupe. They present, in addition to the grand Fantomime of the House that Jack Built, a most excellent little piece known as the Spinners.
